

| Question | Working | Answer | Mark | Notes                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|----------|---------|--------|------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 15       |         | Proof  | C1   | for identifying one pair of equal angles with a correct reason,e.g. (angle) $BAE =$ (angle) $CDE$ ;angles in the same segment are equalor angles at the circumference subtended on the same arc are equalor for identifying two pairs of equal angles with no correct reasons given(angles must be within the appropriate triangles) |
|          |         |        | C1   | for identifying a second pair of equal angles with a correct reason,e.g. (angle) $AEB =$ (angle) $DEC$ ;opposite angles or vertically opposite angles are equalor for identifying the three pairs of equal angles with no correct reasons given                                                                                                                   |
|          |         |        | C1   | for stating the three pairs of equal angles of the two trianglese.g. $ABE = DCE$ , $BEA = CED$ , $EAB = EDC$ with fully correct reasons                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |